Take a Stand Against Domestic Violence

Elgin Police Chief Swoboda and Cheryl Stella featured speakers at Rally

For Domestic Violence Awareness Month this year we are encouraging everyone to "Take a Stand Against Domestic Violence".

Rally Speakers Elgin Police Chief Swoboda and Cheryl Stella

On the following page are places to go to get more information, some educational opportunities, and an invitation to join with others to "Stand Against Domestic Violence."

The rally, October 29, in Spartan Auditorium, Building G, at Elgin Community College at 7:00pm will feature Cheryl Stella a Domestic Violence Survivor, and Elgin Police Chief Jeffrey Swoboda. Cheryl will share her story of shattered marriage expectations, and the impact of hiding abuse when it happened. Chief Swoboda will address how men, the police, and the community can take a stand against domestic violence. The rally is free and open to all.

Other events include a walk-in educational program at ECC, a domestic violence dynamics presentation at Randall Oaks Library, the Clothesline Project at ECC, and information tables at area libraries.

Come to the education programs, make a visit to us at the libraries, or just stop by to say hello. We are always glad to see you.

Community Crisis Center 40th Anniversary

celebrating 40 years of partnership with the Elgin area

Community Crisis Center, Inc. has served Elgin and surrounding communities for 40 years.

It was in 1975 that the doors first opened providing a safe place for women and their children to stay while they determined the next steps in their lives.

During the 40 years, the Crisis Center services have expanded to include services to victims of Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault, as well as providing services to those who are in need of food, coats, diapers, phone service, rent and utility help etc.

The Community Crisis Center has been well supported by the Elgin community with donations, volunteers, and participation in fundraising.

We want to have a great evening of celebration together.

Mural art decorates entrance

The mural in process.

Schueneman have underwritten local artist, Tracey Padron to paint a mural in the entrance to the Crisis Center.

The finished mural will incorporate pictures of our founding mothers as a tribute to them.

Taking a cue from a statement by Executive Director, Gretchen Vapnar, that clients come to us when they are at the end of their rope, a portion of the mural depicts people holding on to a frayed rope to climb the stairs.

We are enjoying watching the progress as this mural is taking shape.

As part of our 40 year celebration, donors Art and Nancy

It was a busy summer. . .

From fundraisers to building repairs, it has been a busy summer at the Crisis Center. With your help, we ate heartily at a "Sweet Tomatoes" Fund-raiser, sang along with "Musicians on a Mission," and marched in the Elgin 4th of July Parade (Did you see us? Were you with us?)

And did you attend a block party, or other "National Night Out" evening event? Volunteers and staff attended to provide community Crisis Center information to persons in Campton Hills, Bartlett, Carpentersville, the Kane County Judicial Center, and South Elgin, and provided information for the Block Parties and for the Festival Park Party in Elgin.

In addition you may have spotted volunteers at the Elgin Harvest Market or eaten a treat supplied by us at a Festival Park movie night.

A Call to Men

One nonprofit aims to redefine manhood in order to end domestic violence

May 06, 2015
By domesticshelters.org

Tony Porter, co-founder of the nonprofit A Call to Men, believes ending violence against women starts by redefining what it means to be a man. In his moving 2010 TED Talk, Porter describes a time when he caught himself telling his sobbing five-year-old son to go to his room, pull himself together and not come out again until he “can talk to me like a man.”

But with his daughter? “She could get on my knee, cry, cry it out, it didn’t matter.” He realized that the definition of “being a man” meant emotions weren’t allowed, a feeling he traced back to his own childhood.

Growing up in New York City between Harlem and the Bronx, Porter says he was taught that “men had to be tough, had to be strong, courageous, dominating—no pain, no emotions, with the exception of anger.” It was ingrained in him that men were in charge, which meant women were not. He learned that women were of less value, they were the property of men and they could be treated like sexual objects. Only later did he learn these ideals of being a man were adopted by much of society.

Porter is on a mission to change that stereotype, one talk at a time. He co-founded the nonprofit A Call to Men with Ted Bunch in 2002 to educate males all over the world that preventing domestic and sexual violence starts with them, and that starts with a conversation.

“We speak to a wide variety of audiences—high school and middle school students, colleges and universities, law enforcement, military personnel, government officials, and professional athletes and coaches. Our training team presents to tens of thousands of people each year,” Porter says, adding, “Our programs are geared toward men and boys, but we always encourage women to attend our events as well.”

One of A Call to Men’s guiding principals states that men are responsible for creating, maintaining and benefiting from a male-dominated culture. That’s why Porter says the organization’s motto is to “reach in and grab the hearts of men to ensure they leave our presence thinking and feeling differently than when they entered.”
